The Little Yellow Chicken is a repetitive text and after reading once or twice with your children they might like to read some of the parts themselves. This is called shared reading. Some children might be able to read most of the story by themselves from the start. It will depend on their confidence and level of development. Support your child where needed.

After listening to and reading these ask your child to tell you about what happened in the stories. What was the same/similar? What was different?

Discussion questions:

How do you feel about how the other animals treated The Little Red Hen and the Little Yellow Chicken?

Who made the best choice in the end- The Little Red Hen or The Little Yellow Chicken?
Why do you think this?

We would love to know what you think so ask your parents to post your responses here. If you want to draw a picture or do some writing about the stories then you could take a photo and post your work on your portfolio.
